"Are we going to be bad?" demanded Merritt, testily, "are we going to stand for this holdup?" and he turned disgustedly toward the door.

"Don't you think we'd better keep Mr. Slade busy in some other way," Strickland repeated.

"I don't," Merritt flung back over his shoulder as he left the room, followed, as usual, by Hunt.

Merritt's hasty departure was the signal for Katherine to adjust her wraps and remark: "We must be late for Triest."

Hayes followed her. "I must see you alone, Katherine. You're still free--there's no foreigner on the scene, is there, Katherine?"

"Bob," Katherine's voice was sweet but firm. "I don't think I shall ever marry now."

"Oh, nonsense," he protested. "No," even more positively. "The more I see of men--but what's the use? There never was but one man I could have got on with, and I didn't happen to live in his time."

"Who was the boy?" Hayes asked, lightly.

"Strange," Katherine replied, pensively. "I've just been talking about him--Napoleon Bonaparte."

"Oh, Lord--that fellow," Hayes was much relieved. "Can I have tomorrow evening?"

"Yes--if you--yes--tomorrow evening, Bob."

Her voice lingered a bit on the Bob, and with quick impulsiveness Hayes caught her hand and kissed it.

In another minute she had turned to Slade.

"Oh, Mr. Slade, won't you let me make a head of you?"

"A head of me?" Slade repeated in surprise.

"Think it over," Katherine suggested, as she and her father went out, leaving Hayes and Slade watching her proud, graceful figure until it disappeared from view.

Slade looked critically at Hayes for a moment or two after the girl had gone.

"Oh, now I remember," he suddenly exclaimed. "You're the chap she gave up for Paris a long time ago?"

"When she was twenty-one and I was twenty-four and six feet one inch of a western lawyer, just out of the woods. How does Mrs. Slade take to this governorship business?" he finished, abruptly.

"She doesn't take to it," Slade's voice was hard.

"I was afraid she wouldn't."

"Well, nobody's going to stand in my way." A malignant light showed in his eyes.

"My boy, I'm out to win."

In spite of the fact that he was in full evening attire, he thrust his hands into his pockets and almost strutted about the room. "I outgeneraled that crowd here tonight. By God, I did! Do you know?" He paused in his walk and looked down on Hayes' six feet sprawled over one of the brocade chairs--"there's just a little drop of that fellow--Napoleon Bonaparte--in me!"

"Napoleon Bonaparte got on by leaving a woman behind," Hayes returned, seriously, refusing to enter into Slade's spirit of self-satisfied good humor.

"You mind your own d--n business, Bob," Slade turned on him, suddenly.

"All right--I'm off to the opera. I only meant that Napoleon was a bad boy for you to follow, because he treated his first wife like a dirty dragger. That's why I'm glad that second little Austrian hussy paid him back. That's all. I love Mrs. Slade. When I was sick with fever in your mining camp she was a mother to me."

"Don't forget that I made you," Slade reminded him. "I," and he tapped his chest. "I gave you your chance."

"I don't. All the same I'd hate to see you elected, because of Mrs. Slade. It seems to be the regular thing, becoming universal, for a very successful man to leave home the minute he's on his feet. Good night."

"One minute, Bob. You've given me a lot of good advice. I'll give you some. Are you in love with that girl?"

"Yes," Hayes grunted; "good night. Is that all?"

"No," Slade paused, watching Hayes through narrowed eyelids. "That girl needs a large pie with every one of her fingers in it. Bob, I'm sorry for you. Your pie isn't big enough."

"Well--it's my pie. Good night," and he was gone.

After Hayes had gone, Slade sat, his arms resting on the table, staring into space. Every now and then the corners of his mouth came down and his eyes narrowed. He was thinking of Katherine Strickland and Hayes. That woman for Hayes! Hayes must be a presumptuous pup to ever think of winning that queen. Such women were meant for the kings of the earth--not for their hirelings.

Suddenly Slade's eyes lighted with the fire of decision. His mouth became a firm, straight line of determination.

There was something implacable and grim in his very attitude as the resolve to win Katherine Strickland became fixed in his mind. He longed to hurry after her--to tell her of his decision to fight, if not with, then for her. He was eager to show her just how much they two together could make out of life, a big, fine fight for position and power.

Even the thought of being governor was left in the distance as plan after plan raced through his mind, of greater conquests and bigger achievements, possible only with a woman like Katherine Strickland for his wife. So absorbed and intense were his thoughts of the future with her for the moment he forgot completely the woman who for 30 years had kept her place as his wife. In all his dealings he had never considered obstacles, except to sweep them from his path.

As he remembered the present and Mary, he never hesitated or faltered from his newly made resolution.

Mary could go it alone. He would see that she had everything that money could buy. He would make her comfortable and take care of her. That she should be further considered never entered his mind. Always ruthless in his methods, he was equally cruel even when the obstacle to his advancement was a fragile little woman who had given him the best of her love and years and who would gladly have laid down her life to save his.

It was not as if a sudden flame of intensive, overwhelming love for Katherine Strickland had surged through his heart. It was nothing as decent or as fine or as blameless as that. His whole attitude toward the girl was one of cold-blooded acquisition. He had determined to have her just as he had determined only last week to outbid every other man at the rug auction. He wanted her to take a place in his life because he knew what her value would be to him. He wanted her beauty, her brain, her savoir faire, as so many stepping stones by which to mount higher and higher in the affairs of the state and the nation.

In spite of the fact that he criticized his wife's lack of social graces, he was wise enough to know that he was far from a finished product himself. In spite of himself, traces of the paragon occasionally showed through the veneer of bluff and arrogance. With a wife like Katherine he would soon come to know all the fine points of the social game. A wife like Katherine would cover up a multitude of his little sins of commission and omission.

CHAPTER IV.

Slade wanted Katherine Strickland for his wife much the same as he would have desired a wealthy, clever, influential man for a partner. It was to be a union of ambition. There was no tenderness in his thoughts of her. He was actuated purely and simply by the lust for power and the greed of glory. All the softer, better things in the man's nature were swamped by this torrent of craving for worldly success that was sweeping him on to commit the most dastardly act in his long career of trampling over the heads and hearts of adversaries and opponents.

Even when he was a boy Dan Slade had always set his teeth at "You can't do it," or "It can't be done." The very difficulty of a thing strengthened his determination to do. All his life long his success had been punctuated by the ruin of other men. He had not advanced so far without pushing other men back. Now that a woman instead of a man stood in the way, the result was the same. His methods might be quieter, more merciful, but the answer would be the same. Mary's sterling worth, her long years of devotion and sweet tenderness counted for nothing once he became convinced that Mary's dowdiness, her standpat policy and her arrested development were stop-gaps in his own opportunity for progression. He ignored the fact that the little brown-eyed, patient woman was as much a part of him as were his eyes or his arms or any other very essential part of his being.

It was at just this point in Slade's pitiless reasoning that Mary, peering over the baluster and seeing him alone, hurried down the stairs.

"Thank goodness, they've gone," she declared as she came into the room. Then seeing the numerous side lights burning she hastened to turn one after the other down to a glimmer. "I'm so glad you're not going out," she went on, coming over to him and rubbing her cheek against his sleeve. The little movement was a pathetically mute appeal for some caress. "What'd they say?" she asked, suddenly, as she realized that her tender yearning met with no response.

But her husband was in no communicative frame of mind.

"You're not mad with me, are you?" she questioned, wistfully, very much like an eager child who has been repressed.

"Go Ahead With Your Paper, I'll Take My Chances."

"No," Slade replied, briefly and without much interest.

Mary breathed a quick sigh of relief. "Ah, then, we'll have a nice, quiet, pleasant evening," she declared, adding coaxingly: "Let's go upstairs and have a game of euchre. We haven't played for ever so long."

Slade looked at her, his eyes drawn into a deep frown. It was true he wasn't angry with her, but he was angry at the thwarting circumstances that were hemming him in. Her very manner irritated him now--her quiet contentment, her calm acceptance of her failure to meet his guests and fill her place as mistress of his home madened him.

He was all the more determined to fight for something else--to begin his campaign for a governorship and another woman that moment.

Progressing Nicely.

The various committees appointed by Floating Canoe Tribe, No. 76, I. O. E. M., to make all preliminary arrangements for the numerous tribes throughout the State which will congregate here during the next fortnight, have been untiring in their efforts, and there is every indication the coming meet will eclipse any previous gathering of Red Men held in the domain of Kentucky. Elaborate preparations are being made for the entertainment of visiting tribesmen, and judging things from the present outlook, it will prove one of the most notable fraternal gatherings ever held within the gates of our city.

On Sunday, May 10, the local tribe will hold memorial services and pay loving and graceful tribute to their departed tribesmen—their dead. There will be several splendid orators present on this occasion, and the ceremonies will be solemn, beautiful and impressive. Hon. Beckham Overstreet, of Louisville, the gifted young Kentucky orator, will be the principal speaker on this occasion. He has thrilled and charmed thousands by his matchless oratory, and the public is invited to hear him.

Monday, the 11th, members of the "Haymakers," a side issue of the Order, will engage in a grand powwow and war dance and make things both lively and interesting for all comers and goers. There will not be a dull moment during the entire day. As everybody knows, the "Haymakers" are a lively bunch and do not belong to that dull class of individuals. You must be up and doing when the "Haymakers" are on the war path, or you are liable to lose your scalp. No doubt, several pale faces will be branded.

Tuesday morning, the 12th, the Great Council, composed of big chiefs and great warriors—representatives from every tribe in the State—will be here and go into executive session. New rules and regulations will possibly be adopted at this session for the government of the numerous tribesmen who abound throughout the Kentucky hunting grounds. This, no doubt, will be a most interesting meeting. A large number of delegates are expected to respond to roll call, as there are hundreds of tribes in the Kentucky reservation. The Great Council sessions will take up all of Tuesday and Wednesday. Some of the Big Chiefs and High Dignitaries, who directed the destinies of the Kentucky Red Men, will surrender their robes and high offices to other notable warriors and braves, who will endeavor to carry out the great work formulated by their worthy predecessors.

ENDORSED AT HOME

Such Proof As This Should Convince Any Richmond Citizen.

The public endorsement of a local citizen is the best proof that can be produced. None better, none stronger can be had. When a man comes and testifies to his fellow-citizens, addresses his friends and neighbors, you may be sure he is thoroughly convinced or he would not do so. Telling one's experience when it is for the public good is an act of kindness that should be appreciated.

The following statement given by a resident of Richmond adds one more to the many of Home Endorsement which are being published about Doan's Kidney Pills. Read it.

Mrs. Pearl Boen, 109 Hallie Irvine St., Richmond, Ky., says: "My back ached and my kidneys were disordered. At times I was nervous and didn't sleep well. I felt little like getting about, in fact, I was miserable in every way until I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Middleton's Drug Store. I began to feel fine immediately after taking them and their continued use made me feel better in every way."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Boen had. Foster-McBirney Co., Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

The World's Population.

The population of the world has increased 140,000,000 in the past four years, and that means a demand for 140,000,000 more barrels of flour; besides meat or its substitutes, for the increased population. Therefore, there seems to be little prospect of a material reduction in the cost of living.

Farm Wages.

Although farm wages in the United States increased about 37 per cent. from 1900 to 1910, land values nearly doubled in the same time, indicating that in the distribution of the proceeds from farming operations, a larger proportion now goes to capital account and less to labor account than formerly. The interest rate on the return on the capitalized value of land, however, is probably less now than 25 or 30 years ago. The value per acre of crop production increased about 50 per cent. from 1900 to 1910.

$3,750 In a Dust Heap.

John Culnac, 12 years old, and Everett Peabody, 10 years old, while digging about a rubbish pile at the Fellers factory one day last week, looking for bottles to sell to the junkman, found a roll of bills among a lot of papers which had been thrown out as waste. The roll contained $3,750. They took it to the factory superintendent, who identified it as the money lost a few days ago by Geo. Collins, who had drawn it from the bank to make a payment on a house he had purchased, had lost it and had been unable to get any trace of it.

Collins gave each of the boys $50 as a reward for their honesty.—Binghamton, N. Y., dispatch to N. Y. Herald.

Rats as Food.

Now that we have three Chinese restaurants in the West End, Londoners ought to be able to enjoy the pleasure of feeding off rats, which form a favorite dish in China. Split open, dried, pressed and powdered with a finely ground white bark, they look somewhat like haddock as they hang in long strings over butcher stalls.

Dr. Arthur Stradling, who shared Frank Buckland's cosmopolitan tastes in food, once declared that "rats would be not only wholesome, but very nice if properly prepared. Admiral Beaufort and other arctic explorers speak highly of rats as a wholesome addition to their supply of food while in the far North"—London Chronicle.

Plant Bed Notes.

Plants are up in tobacco beds in a number of beds in Kentucky.

Tobacco canvas is seen all over Garrard county. A large acreage will be planted.

All over Bourbon county can be seen long white stretches of cotton, showing that hundreds of tobacco beds have been sown, and the tiny weeds under their protection will soon begin to give promise of rich returns.

Montgomery county growers will grow for quality more than quantity this year, notwithstanding they have really more acreage than they should attempt under any conditions.

In Clark and Madison counties white canvas may be seen dotted all over the countryside. A large acreage will be planted in both counties.

Fayette county, it is said, will put in her usual large acreage.

Which Kind Are You? On the subject of debtors Homer Hay has the following in the Marion (Kan.) Record:

"Some folks can't pay their debts when due, but regret it, and pay as soon as they can. Heaven prosper 'em. Some folks can pay their debts, but never do. Heaven be merciful to 'em. Some folks pay their debts cheerfully. Heaven bless 'em. Some folks pay their debts, but roar about it and abuse their creditors. Heaven pity 'em. Nothing shows folks up more than the attitude they take toward paying or trying to pay, their debts. A newspaper subscription post paid is a debt, and one that should be, and generally is, paid cheerfully. How about yours, if in arrears? Look at the date following your name on the label of this paper (or its wrapper) if it comes to you in a wrapper, and if in arrears, please call and settle or send remittance by mail."

Was Able to Sleep and Eat Again

Mrs. Mueller says: "I keep Peruina in the house constantly. When I am not feeling well I take a few doses. It always restores." Mrs. Mueller's story of her experience with Peruina fully explains why she always keeps Peruina on hand. A few years ago she was very sick. The trouble seemed to be the stomach and liver. She suffered great pain. Was unable to get anything to help her. She was growing weaker and weaker. She became tired of life.

MRS. M. MUELLER, P. O. Box 321, Hawley, Wayne Co., Penna.

Sombody suggested that she write to the Peruina Co. She did so. Through their advice she began to use Peruina. In a letter from her at this time she says: "Through the use of Peruina I have regained my health. I took only a bottle and a half when I was able to sleep and eat again and my nervousness disappeared." No wonder Mrs. Mueller keeps Peruina in the house. Under similar circumstances Peruina would be in every house in the land. Any one taking Peruina ought to have a free copy of the "Ills of Life." Address Peruina Co., Columbus, Ohio. People who object to liquid medicines can now obtain Peruina Tablets.

The Governor's Lady

"You can amuse yourself after I'm gone," he answered over his shoulder. "Then you are going out?" Mary's voice echoed the disappointment she felt.

"Yes," Slade continued to be monosyllabic. "But I want to have a talk with you. Mary—we've got to come to some understanding."

"Why, what—?" Mary began, and then stopped. For the first time she noticed his changed manner and his averted eyes. She started to fumble with her workbasket.

"I can't put it off any longer. I—er—" Slade stopped short. He was finding this attempt at an "understanding" much more difficult than he had anticipated.

"What is it you're trying to say, Dan?" Mary's voice was firmer than his. "What's in your mind? You keep hinting at something lately and you never finish it. What is it?"

"You're a rich woman in your own name, Mary. Are you satisfied with what I've settled on you?"

"Why, yes," came the quick response, as Mary's puzzled eyes searched his for a reason for the strange question. Then she added: "You've been mighty good to me, Dan."

"How would you like to go and live in the country, Mary?"

Glad surprise filled the woman's eyes. Her thin cheeks flushed as she clasped her hands excitedly.

"Oh, Dan, you know I'd like it. You're awfully good, father. I knew you'd back down and give in. This is no place for us."

"You leave me out of the question." And to his credit the man became shamefaced.

"I can't leave you out of the question," she protested quickly, not an inkling of her husband's real meaning having entered her head. In her perfect love and loyalty she was imperious to any hint of neglect or disloyalty from him. Had she known his thoughts her first care would have been to soothe him as one whose brain, overtaken with affairs beyond her understanding, had suddenly clouded.

For an instant the man was silent. His face was turned from hers and he was looking out the doorway through which the stately figure of Katherine Strickland had just passed and through which he hoped to walk some day—gone.

"I—I wouldn't go with you, Mary," he finally turned and looked her squarely in the eyes.

"Why—where would you be? Where would you live? Where would you go? She stopped and then finished. "Pshaw. That's all foolishness, Dan."

"Mary," Slade was firmer now. His voice had a ring of finality, but Mary didn't understand. "I can't go on apologizing for you eternally! You can't have a headache every night! I must either have a wife who can be the head of my household or none."

Into the woman's heart there leaped a sharp fear, followed by the childish idea that perhaps, because she wouldn't go to the opera, she was to be punished—sent away alone—until she was forgiven.

"You're tired of me," she suggested. "If that were true and you filled the bill, we could put up with each other," he returned bluntly, "but it isn't so."

"Don't you love me?" she half-breathed the question timidly.

For a brief instant something caught at Slade's heart and tugged and tugged. He turned with a look of infinite tenderness and said, simply: "Yes, Mary, I do." His tone was genuine and sincere.

Mary laughed a little, happy laugh. At the sound Slade's mood changed like a flash. It grated on his already overwrought nerves. It seemed to dismiss the controversy, to end the argument, to ring the death-knell of the dream that had come to him. The careless way in which she apparently dropped the discussion of going away nettled him. Prompted by a sudden impulse, he snatched her workbasket from her lap and flung it the full length of the room. "D—n that basket!" he exclaimed. "Can't I ever see you without it?"

"Dan!" Mary's gasp of amazement was the only sound in the room. It was the first time he had ever been harsh with her. She shrank back hurt and frightened. "Why, good Lord, Dan, you never did that before."

Then, with quiet dignity, she began to pick up the basket, the hated darning cotton, the needles and scissors, and the little worn thimble. Slade, watching her slight, stooping figure, ought to have been ashamed, but his anger was flaming hot and he didn't as much as offer to help.

Mary's mood changed, too. "I believe you're doing it to get your own way," she sputtered, "but you ain't going to get it. I've got as much right to my life as you've got to yours."

As she came up to him, he stood grim and silent, suddenly determined that if she wouldn't go he would. If she refused his offer of a home in the country, then she could have this great house to herself and he would live at the club.

"There ain't anything you could ask of me I wouldn't do—except—" Mary's troubled face was looking into his.

"Except what I ask," he finished, sarcastically, and hurried from the room, curtly ordered his dressing bag packed and then, hat in hand, his overcoat on his arm, came back into the room.

"Did it ever occur to you, Mary, that you're a mule?" he asked. "You're sweet and good tempered and amiable but you'd have given the mule that came out of Noah's ark points on how to be stubborn."

"How often have I failed you in these years, Dan?"

"You're failing me now. You won't look at things with my eyes."

"We're not one person, we're two, Dan," she reminded him, quietly.

"Well, that's the trouble, we ought to be one. That's just what I'm getting at. We ought to be of one mind."

"Whose? Yours?" and Mary's sweet mouth puckered into a very little smile.

"I'm done," Slade decided, hopelessly. "I can remember the time when you would have thought that was cunning," she reproached him.

"I'm going to my club, Mary," he announced, disregarding her playful attempt to smooth things over.

Mary gazed at him, bewildered by his swift changes of mood, hurt by his attitude, almost angry because he was so unreasonable.

Then love came rushing up into her heart. After all he was her Dan. What did this crossness or his nervousness mean? Leaving her breakfast practically untasted, Mary again ventured to look at the clock. The time had so coolly deserted. He was being dined and banqueted and fêted, being everywhere hailed as the candidate for governor.

He was sniffing the first breath of future glories with keenest delight. This was the sort of thing that made a man feel big! This was the sort of life to lead—with men bowing and salaaming all around him. He walked with a firmer tread. His shoulders were thrown back a bit more arrogantly. His chest was more noticeable as he walked down the street.

The innate conceit and self-esteem of the man made him overlook the fact that the party needed a rich man. He was quite satisfied that he was being boosted by Strickland and the others because of his brains, his unusual ability, his oratory and his power to lead men. He was happier than he had been for years. Every day the new life looked brighter and the old less desirable.

If he gave a thought to Mary it was a passing one. Mary was "comfortable." She had everything that money could buy. The servants would be taking good care of her, of course. Of the lump in Mary's throat as she sat at the lonely breakfast table and as she went through the still more lonely ordeal of the formal dinner, he knew nothing.

Of the woman's aching heart and her eyes bright with unshed tears as she tried to keep up before the servants and make excuses for his absence, Slade was heartlessly oblivious. Or perhaps it was self-esteem again, that made him unable to feel for her—the self-esteem of the successful man who feels no wounds when fighting for what he wants, and neither knows nor cares that others feel them. He had a heart, but it was unpleasantly like Pharaoh's.

But of Katherine Strickland's statuesque beauty and her cosmopolitan manner he was delightfully aware. During the weeks since he had left home Slade had been calling regularly at the Strickland home, partly to consult with the senator and partly for the purpose of posing for the bust which Katherine was modeling. As they sat hour after hour, he posing comfortably, she working deftly and talking even more cleverly, Slade and Katherine had come to a mutual understanding. The more they saw of each other the more each became convinced that their paths would inevitably converge.

Katherine talked animatedly and entertainingly of social life abroad and of the gay times in Washington, and Slade's heart warmed and his eyes flashed as he pictured himself a part of that charmed circle. With keen penetration he saw the longing of the girl's nature, her iron will, her determination to gain social honors at almost any cost. He flattered himself that when he said the word Katherine Strickland would be ready to cast her lot with him.

From the smoking room of Senator Strickland's big house came the strident sound of men's voices, raised in excitement, and, it would seem, acclamation. Now and again the senator's smooth, oratorical voice would sound and then Slade's slightly deprecatory, yet firm and pleased. Then would follow the pattern of applause, laughter and the sudden dropping of voices that signified earnest converse.

To Katherine Strickland, sitting in the softly lighted library adjoining, every sound had its meaning. Her eyes sparkled with keen interest. In her cheeks glowed the deep rose of excitement and exultation. In that other room she knew they were making history. In that other room they were putting up a man for governor, a man she admired and who had aroused her interest as no other man had ever done.

Nothing could stand in that man's way, she thought, with a catch in her breath, nothing could stop him now that he was fairly started. How different this dim, earnest, forceful personality from Bob Hayes, the man who had first won her girl's heart, and yet for whom she had never been willing to renounce her interest in the political and social life which obsessed her with the same compelling force as it did Slade.

With an effort she brought her mind back to the present and to Mrs. Wesley Merritt, who had dropped in on

CHAPTER V. Mary Slade sat down to the breakfast table with a certain sense of bewilderment. It was the same this morning as it had been each successive morning since Dan's departure. She could not bring herself to the realization of the fact that Dan had not come home—apparently did not intend to come home.

She had waited up the night he had gone to the club, just as she had waited up every night of their married life, no matter where her husband was or how late he might be coming home. As the night hours lengthened into day she was forced to the conclusion that Dan meant to stay away for the night. That he wouldn't be home at all through the day never occurred to her. She reasoned that a night's sleep would clear her mind and that he would have recovered from his "tantrum" the next day. But Dan didn't "run in" that day nor the next. The days had become weeks, yet neither by telephone nor letter had he sent as much as a word.

matter? She went up to him, pulled his scarf a bit closer round his throat and as he turned away with a muttered word, waited patiently. Then, laying her hand on his arm—such a thin little hand, with his wedding ring hanging loosely on it—asked: "Shall I wait up for you?"

Slade's face worked convulsively. He didn't understand, poor little soul. He was going away for good, for all time, and she was asking if she would wait up for him. More than once before she had asked that question of him, the question that from a wife's lips, carries with it unspoken, tender pleading. For a space he was torn with emotions he could not define, had hardly expected himself to feel. Something bade him turn back upon ambition and pride and clasp into his arms this little woman who had worked for him, with him, who had had faith in him when he was poor, and who had struggled and cooked and slaved for him that he might rise to his present position.

He struggled against the feeling, fought it back and conquered. "No, don't wait up for me."

"All right," Mary agreed. "I won't, if you don't want me to," and then, with a quivering smile, "but I will wait up for you all the same."

Slade was touched, but he stiffened his shoulders. Wealth he had won, honors he meant to have—and Katherine Strickland.

"Good-night, Mary," he called, coldly, as he hurried out of the room.

"Why, he didn't kiss me," she hurried to the door. "Dan, you forgot something, Dan!"

Slade, hastening to the door, halted, hesitated, turned back.

"You come right back here and kiss me," Mary demanded, affectionately.

"Such didoes; You kiss me," she raised her face for the kiss she thought was "good-night" and which he meant as "good-by." Slade stooped and laid his lips on hers, gently, reverently, then hurried out, almost as if he were afraid to stay a minute longer.

"Such didoes," Mary laughed to herself. She looked around the great empty room. It suddenly struck her that she had never really been happy in this room. Riches had proved a burden rather than a pleasure. They had robbed her of Dan's devotion, his confidence, his gaiety. She hastened to turn out the lights, shuddering as she did so. She grabbed her workbasket from the table and suddenly overcome with fright in the great silent shadowy room, fled to the lighted hall, calling: "Susie, Susie—"

CHAPTER V. Mary Slade sat down to the breakfast table with a certain sense of bewilderment. It was the same this morning as it had been each successive morning since Dan's departure. She could not bring herself to the realization of the fact that Dan had not come home—apparently did not intend to come home.

She had waited up the night he had gone to the club, just as she had waited up every night of their married life, no matter where her husband was or how late he might be coming home. As the night hours lengthened into day she was forced to the conclusion that Dan meant to stay away for the night. That he wouldn't be home at all through the day never occurred to her. She reasoned that a night's sleep would clear her mind and that he would have recovered from his "tantrum" the next day. But Dan didn't "run in" that day nor the next. The days had become weeks, yet neither by telephone nor letter had he sent as much as a word.

look courage for Mary to use the telephone on any occasion. She was afraid of the sound of her own voice the moment she began to talk into the transmitter. This time she feared Dan's displeasure and his possible harshness. Mr. Slade was out, had left no message, they did not know when he would return, was the disappointing result as she hung the receiver on the hook.

This morning, as the maid served her breakfast, she resolved to try again. The situation was getting unbearable. It was bad enough to live in the great house and be surrounded by servants with Dan there. Without him she felt like a prisoner of state and looked on the servants as so many jailers.

Leaving her breakfast practically untasted, Mary again ventured to look at the clock. The time had so coolly deserted. He was being dined and banqueted and fêted, being everywhere hailed as the candidate for governor.

He was sniffing the first breath of future glories with keenest delight. This was the sort of thing that made a man feel big! This was the sort of life to lead—with men bowing and salaaming all around him. He walked with a firmer tread. His shoulders were thrown back a bit more arrogantly. His chest was more noticeable as he walked down the street.

The innate conceit and self-esteem of the man made him overlook the fact that the party needed a rich man. He was quite satisfied that he was being boosted by Strickland and the others because of his brains, his unusual ability, his oratory and his power to lead men. He was happier than he had been for years. Every day the new life looked brighter and the old less desirable.

If he gave a thought to Mary it was a passing one. Mary was "comfortable." She had everything that money could buy. The servants would be taking good care of her, of course. Of the lump in Mary's throat as she sat at the lonely breakfast table and as she went through the still more lonely ordeal of the formal dinner, he knew nothing.

Of the woman's aching heart and her eyes bright with unshed tears as she tried to keep up before the servants and make excuses for his absence, Slade was heartlessly oblivious. Or perhaps it was self-esteem again, that made him unable to feel for her—the self-esteem of the successful man who feels no wounds when fighting for what he wants, and neither knows nor cares that others feel them. He had a heart, but it was unpleasantly like Pharaoh's.

But of Katherine Strickland's statuesque beauty and her cosmopolitan manner he was delightfully aware. During the weeks since he had left home Slade had been calling regularly at the Strickland home, partly to consult with the senator and partly for the purpose of posing for the bust which Katherine was modeling. As they sat hour after hour, he posing comfortably, she working deftly and talking even more cleverly, Slade and Katherine had come to a mutual understanding. The more they saw of each other the more each became convinced that their paths would inevitably converge.

Katherine talked animatedly and entertainingly of social life abroad and of the gay times in Washington, and Slade's heart warmed and his eyes flashed as he pictured himself a part of that charmed circle. With keen penetration he saw the longing of the girl's nature, her iron will, her determination to gain social honors at almost any cost. He flattered himself that when he said the word Katherine Strickland would be ready to cast her lot with him.

From the smoking room of Senator Strickland's big house came the strident sound of men's voices, raised in excitement, and, it would seem, acclamation. Now and again the senator's smooth, oratorical voice would sound and then Slade's slightly deprecatory, yet firm and pleased. Then would follow the pattern of applause, laughter and the sudden dropping of voices that signified earnest converse.

To Katherine Strickland, sitting in the softly lighted library adjoining, every sound had its meaning. Her eyes sparkled with keen interest. In her cheeks glowed the deep rose of excitement and exultation. In that other room she knew they were making history. In that other room they were putting up a man for governor, a man she admired and who had aroused her interest as no other man had ever done.

Nothing could stand in that man's way, she thought, with a catch in her breath, nothing could stop him now that he was fairly started. How different this dim, earnest, forceful personality from Bob Hayes, the man who had first won her girl's heart, and yet for whom she had never been willing to renounce her interest in the political and social life which obsessed her with the same compelling force as it did Slade.

With an effort she brought her mind back to the present and to Mrs. Wesley Merritt, who had dropped in on

With poor blood we are land, susceptible to colds, lack of energy and ambition, and the gradual decline of strength makes prompt and careful treatment necessary. Drugs or alcohol cannot make good blood and must be avoided.

SCOTT'S EMULSION is nature's richest blood-maker because its wholesome medical nourishment, carefully predigests that it assimilates without taxing digestion and it increases the red corpuscles in the blood, strengthens the organs and tissues and rebuilds the whole system.

Absolutely nothing compares with Scott's Emulsion to purify and enrich the blood to overcome or avoid anemia. It is totally free from alcohol or opiates and your health demands the purity of Scott's.

"Waiter," asked the impatient customer, "do you call this stuff an oyster?"

"Yessuh," replied Mr. Erasmus Link.

"Why the oyster in this stew isn't big enough to flavor it."

"He wasn't put in to flavor it, suh. It was jes' drapped in to christen it."

BUSINESS IS MARKING THE MAN WHO DRINKS

Why So Many Former "Good Fellows" Have "Cut It Out" and How They Did It.

"There's a reason," as they say in the advertisements, for the great American railway systems putting the screws on drinking employees. A train in charge of a crew whose brains are alcoholically stewed would be no safer than if it were manned by a crowd of crazy people.

Common sense is getting a chance these days. People are stopping to think. Business says "Quit Drink." There is no sentiment about it. Business, however, knows that Incapacity and Alcohol are bosom friends. They're chums. Drink and Efficiency, however, do not mix.

This age demands efficiency and the man who once drank and thought it all right is now marked.

Business has got his number. He's off the line of march of the candidates for promotion. This is why so many of the wise old boys have stopped drink.

It is easy to get rid of that old craving appetite for liquor. To try and stop when your system is filled with alcoholic poison means torture. You can surely and quickly escape this torture, which almost invariably upsets good resolutions and pulls a man back to drink.

The Neal Treatment will neutralize and expel all alcoholic poison and change love for liquor into disgust for everything alcoholic.

Three days at the old Capt. C. M. Holloway homestead—now the Cincinnati Neal Institute—will be sufficient to bring about this seeming miracle. Over 2,000 cases of alcoholism have been successfully treated at the three Neal Institutes in Ohio.

For full particulars and booklet, write The Neal Institute, 601 Maple Avenue, Cincinnati, Ohio. Telephone Avon 4020. Other Neal Institutes at Columbus and Cleveland.

BRONCHITIS CONQUERED

Royersford, Pa., Man Tells How.

At this season of year with such sudden changes, it is so easy to take cold, and almost before one is aware there is inflammation in the bronchial tubes—a hard cough and unless checked in time chronic pulmonary troubles may result.

Townsend Young of Royersford, Pa., says: "A severe bronchial trouble contracted caused me much difficulty about breathing. My chest felt clogged up and there was considerable soreness. I tried different remedies without help; but I am glad to say that Vinol cured my bronchial trouble which had lasted for three months. My breathing is all right and the soreness entirely gone from my chest."

Vinol contains the curative, healing principles of fresh cods' livers (without oil) and tonic iron. We guarantee it to be delicious in taste and to satisfy you with its medicinal effects.

P. S. If you have any skin trouble try Saxo Salve. We guarantee it.

Temperance Topics.

We are indebted to the National Advocate, official organ of the National Temperance Society, for many of the following items.—Editor.

The Webb-Kenyon law, giving States control over liquor shipments, was upheld by the Kansas Supreme Court.

Prohibition will be extended to the entire naval service, under an order issued by Secretary Daniels at Washington, which will go into effect on July 1, next.

A trainman, who is in charge of 200 passengers and $250,000 worth of rolling stock, or who is directing an express locomotive, needs to be at his best physically, and this is possible only in total abstinence from intoxicants.

Senator Oliver, of Pittsburg, has declared in favor of a State-wide prohibition plank in the Republican party platform of Pennsylvania.

Frederick Landis, former member of Congress from Indiana, made his first temperance speech in Muncie on March 1st. He had never been "a regular passenger on the Barleycorn Special, but an occasional tourist." Now he has left it.

A bill is before the U. S. Senate to prohibit the sale of liquors in the Hawaiian Islands. John C. Woolley and others have appeared before the Senate committee having the bill in charge.

Because the sale of liquor on its trains is unlawful in the State of Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, the N. Y., N. H. & Hartford railroad system issued orders that no more liquor be sold thereon, beginning from the first of March last.

The sale of liquors on all dining-cars while in Michigan has been forbidden by the railroad management of that State.

The Mississippi Senate made more drastic and then passed the law enforcement bill which had previously passed the House.

Without a cent of tax receipts from saloons, Rockford, Ill., during the year of 1913 expended $343,423.03 on public improvements. Its tax rate is the lowest of any city of its class in the State of Illinois.

The Maine State Board of Prisons and Jail Inspectors has reported that "in 1913 the commitments were 40 per cent. lower than in 1912, and 37 per cent. lower than the average for the last six years." And this on account of the better enforcement of prohibition.

When two ex-Congressmen are convicted of crimes, we stand aghast at such evidence of moral turpitude. But the saloon everywhere tends to or actually teaches that; and the saloon in politics is a constant corrupting element, and good people have been keeping it there, regardless of its effects along the political line, from Congressman down to constable.

Dr. A. D. Bridgman, of Decatur, Ill., 80 years old, has enrolled 1,000 men to vote for prohibition.

Railroads entering Chicago recently agreed to stop selling liquor on trains, and that "the movement be spread throughout the country."

Billy Sunday came to New York for 1 day and made 1 speech March 9th and one reporter quoted him as saying, in a private interview (for public print) that "universal prohibition is coming; you can't stop it any more than you can stop Niagara Falls with a toothpick. Prostitution and the saloon go hand in hand." He further said: "Do away with the saloon and you do away with prostitution."

Law in Michigan.—No person shall be employed as an engineer, train dispatcher, fireman, baggage master, conductor, brakeman or other servant upon any railroad in any operating department who uses intoxicating drinks as a beverage; and any company into whose service any such person shall knowingly be employed shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each offense, to be sued for in the name of the people of Michigan.

Law in Canada.—Selling liquor to any railway employee while on duty—penalty, $50, or a month's imprisonment with hard labor.

Kentucky Reciprocity

Kentucky reciprocity is simple and fraternal: First the colonel mixes jolips. Then the jolips mix the colonel.

After the Presidents.

When Uncle Rod, the old colored man worked about the place, came one morning Mrs. Stone said:

"Well, Uncle Rod, I hear you have an other set of twins at your house."

"Yaas, missus," responded the old man, "we has. Bress dey little hearts!"

"Have you named them?" asked the lady.

"Yaas'm," said Rod. "Done named 'em aftah two ob de fust Presidents ob dis country."

"Indeed?" said Mrs. Stone, "which two?"

"Ole Christofo Columbus and Juleysus Ceassar," replied Uncle Rod. "We'se great on namin' de chillun fo' de Presidents' our house."—National Monthly.

Imaginary Heart Trouble.

Do you have pains in the region of the heart? Does your heart thump? Is your terrible pounding alarms you? What is wrong? Do you believe these symptoms mean heart trouble? Organic diseases of the heart very seldom occasion much pain. Nearly all of these pains are occasioned by some derangement of the stomach. Meritol Tonic Digestive is especially recommended for indigestion and dyspepsia, and for restoring the stomach to its normal functions and—no more "heart disease." Price $1.00 Wines' Drug Store, exclusive agents.

Cheer Up.

When things ain't going right with you, and you can't make them see; when business matters look real blue, and you fear bankruptcy; when cobwebs gather on your stock and customers are rare; when all your assets are in hock, don't cuss and tear your hair. Just listen to this sage advice, and take it if you are wise: give every article a price, and then go advertise. And advertise from morn to night, don't overlook a day, and soon you'll see the world grow bright, and things will come your way. Invest in good publicity, and fortune you will greet, and in a little while you'll be, way up on easy street.—Luke McLuke.

A healthy man is a king in his own right; an unhealthy man an unhappy slave. For impure blood and sluggish liver, use Burdock Blood Bitters. On the market 35 years. $1.00 a bottle.

Birds Come High at Phoenix Hotel.

"Phoenix birds" take rank among rare avian since the cost of prosecuting the Phoenix Hotel Company, of Lexington, for having the birds in its possession, alleged to be exposed for sale, has been counted up. It is estimated in the Department of Game and Fish that the fines assessed in the State and Federal courts, the costs and attorney fees, run the expense well up toward $1,500. Some 70 quail were involved, which makes their price somewhere around $20 each, to say nothing of the original cost and expressage.

The cases now have all been disposed of. After repeated warning that it would prosecute any hotels or restaurants unlawfully serving game birds, the Fish and Game Department had a representative to search the Phoenix Hotel and the birds were found. That was in February, 1912. Fines amounting to $600 were assessed in the Fayette county court and on appeal the circuit court sustained the finding and the fines were reduced to $150. The Court of Appeals reversed the judgment. On re trial the cases were dismissed and the Court of Appeals reversed the action of the Fayette circuit court, which had given peremptory instructions for the defendant. By agreement judgment has been confessed and fines amounting to $380 and costs assessed.

In the meantime the Federal Department instituted prosecution in the U. S. Court and a fine of $250 was assessed for receiving from Chicago a shipment of quail not properly marked.

Farmers' Line at Union City.
The following well-known farmers, neighbors of the Union City neighborhood, have built a telephone line to their homes and have made arrangements with the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. to get Madison county service through the Richmond exchange. This arrangement allows the citizens of the county the privilege of building their own lines and connecting at any point any line that the Cumberland Company owns, and it makes the rate so cheap that no one who has any use for telephone at all can afford to be without one at the farmers' line rate, as quoted by Mr. J. McCREARY GUARDS:
Awaiting Orders.

The local company of the First Regiment, National Guards, Company M, Capt. Broadus, is awaiting orders from the Adjutant General to mobilize for the front. They have received orders to be in readiness for the summons, but it is not positively certain that they will be called to Mexico, but the chances are that they are likely to be.

LATER—Capt. Broadus, of the local company, has just received notice from headquarters to recruit his company to the maximum strength and be in readiness to move on short notice. His company is one of the best equipped in the State, their guns and side arms being of the very latest improved models. Adjutant General J. Tandy Ellis, of Frankfort, says the Richmond company is one of the best drilled organizations in the Guards, therefore stands an opportunity of being among the first called into service. Official inspection of the home company was made by United States officers at the Armory last night at 8 o'clock. Capt. Broadus has left nothing undone to make his company stand at the head of the State Guards in its inspection.

In the event war is declared 100 good men will be needed to raise the Richmond company to full war strength. Those ambitious for immediate service should communicate at once with Capt. Broadus.

Interurban from Richmond To Lexington.
A movement is on foot for the construction of an interurban line between Richmond and Lexington. Mr. John G. King, of Lexington, is taking an active part in the proposed road. He says the road can be built and equipped with rolling stock for $600,000 and that he believes the greater part of the amount can be raised at home. He says, also, that he believes the road under careful handling would pay 6 to 10 per cent. on the investment.

Will You Be There?

Before You Invest== Investigate

Whether you intend to spend $10.00, $12.50, $15.00 or $20.00 for your Spring Suit, first decide "where" you can secure the greatest clothes value. Search, of course, for garments that will please your eye and become you, but determine that the style and fit are insured by worthy fabrics and substantial tailoring. Griffon Clothes offer you this insurance of style permanence, for at the basis of every Griffon garment is pure, all-wool fabric and honest, conscientious tailoring. No matter what your build may be, no matter what you may demand in style or in fabric, there's a Griffon Suit to meet your taste and to satisfy your ideas of economy.

Wants to be in The Scrap

The Washington correspondent of the Louisville Post says:

HELD AT WASHINGTON.

There is one Kentucky naval officer of high rank who is chafing at the bit and who would enjoy speeding to Mexico to take a hand in the fighting there, but who is prevented from doing so by the important character of his work here.

He is Capt. Carlo Bonaparte Brittain, in charge of the aid in personnel of the Navy Department. Capt. Brittain is a product of Bell county, Ky., who has made an enviable record for himself in the service. He now claims Richmond as his home, his wife's relatives living there.

While detained in Washington, few men are taking a more prominent or a more important part than Capt. Brittain, as he has his finger on the naval pulse and is in direct charge of the sending of war ships, keeping in touch with them and a thousand and one other things.

Capt. Brittain is a son-in-law of Mr. Thos. E. Baldwin, of this place, and we are pleased to know of his success in the navy and predict for him still greater advancement in the near future.

Sudden Death.

Last Sunday night the body of Silas Mitchell was found in bed at Berea, his death, it is said, having been the result of heart failure. For several years Mr. Mitchell had been a traveling salesman for Swift & Co. and was held in high esteem by that company. His remains will be interred in Richmond Cemetery, the date not being fixed, because of the uncertainty of the time of the arrival of relatives and friends who live at a distance.

Try Lackey & Todd's teas and coffees. They are good. Phone 62. 32-1f.
